uncover the stories of the past

bringing the past alive

Explore the historic churches of Devon, Dorset and Cornwall and discover a window to the past – one that brings alive intriguing stories and surprising connections.

Gravestones tell touching tales of love and devotion – or sometimes piracy and murder. Handsome memorials mark fortunes made and lives lost. Rustic hat pegs are a reminder of those who worked the land. You'll find these churches at the end of wooded lanes, perched on cliff tops or in pretty valleys. Each one is special.

All the churches in this leaflet have been saved by the Churches Conservation Trust. The Trust is a charity that cares for more than 350 churches in England. This is one of 18 leaflets that highlight their history and treasures.

immerse yourself in serenely beautiful
St Petrock, Parracombe

Exeter, St Martin

Devon

A thousand-year-old church in the middle of the city

- Dates from before the Norman Conquest
- Beautiful carved marble monuments dedicated to rich and worthy parishioners

St Martin's props up a Medieval building on a corner of Exeter's historic Cathedral Close. It is one of the oldest churches in the city, consecrated a year before the Norman Conquest, and was once one of six churches clustered in the cathedral's shadow. Its tiny parish – smaller than the size of a football pitch – served the workers and traders who crowded into the three- and four-storey houses in the surrounding streets.

The church's roughcast exterior of red volcanic stone – with bright, white Beer stone windows – gives it the air of a fancy gingerbread cake. Inside, it is simple and full of light. Look out for the communion rails with their closely set balusters designed, according to a 17th-century order from the Archbishop of Canterbury, to keep parishioners' dogs from reaching the altar.

Portland, St George

Dorset

A church inspired by St Paul's Cathedral

Vast and solitary, St George's is one of the most magnificent 18th-century churches in Dorset. It rises from the rocky, treeless and dramatic peninsula of Portland and is the masterwork of a local mason named Thomas Gilbert whose grandfather supplied the Portland stone used to build St Paul's Cathedral. The interior is fabulously preserved with its lectern, pulpit, box pews and galleries all surviving.

North Hill, St Torney

Cornwall

One of the tallest towers in Cornwall

St Torney's sits in the village of North Hill on the edge of Bodmin Moor, a familiar name for readers of Daphne Du Maurier's 1936 literary classic Jamaica Inn. The tall tower, richly decorated interior and impressive scale of the church speaks of the wealth and importance of North Hill in the past. See the beautiful wagon roof and majestic arcading, as well as impressive monuments, memorials and stained glass.

St Anthony-in-Roseland, St Anthony

Cornwall

Medieval church
next to a turreted ancestral home

Three centuries of monuments, dedicated to the local Spry family, grace this Medieval church on the picturesque Roseland peninsula. In summer, the churchyard is full of flowers, growing wildly over pretty headstones. The church owes its survival to a Victorian reverend, who rebuilt the chancel and the roofs and installed Minton floor tiles and stained glass.

Parracombe, St Petrock

Devon

Legendary hilltop church with a perfect interior

Set in glorious countryside on the edge of Exmoor this hilltop church dates from Norman times, but it is the lovely Georgian interior with painted texts and wonderful furnishings that make it very special. St Petrock's is believed to be the last church in Devon to use musicians to accompany the hymns – there is a hole in one of the pews for the bow of a bass viol. It was saved from demolition in 1879 by the poet and artist John Ruskin.

Torbryan, Holy Trinity

Devon

Mighty Medieval church deep in the countryside

The magnificent church of Holy Trinity seems very grand for its quiet rural setting, with a superb soaring tower. It is a perfect example of the Gothic Perpendicular style, with a stunning Medieval interior and beautifully carved screen that spans the width of the church with its graceful arches. Below are painted panels of 40 saints – they were once whitewashed, perhaps to save them from the puritanical zeal of the Reformation.

Satterleigh, St Peter

Devon

A tiny rural gem

The church of St Peter lies deep in the country in the hills above the river Mole. A creaking Medieval door opens into a charming interior, with a panelled oak roof, carved pulpit, reading desk and beautiful painted texts. Above the pews, the 24 hat pegs are a reminder of the congregation's size – the church holds no more than 40. On a sunny day, delicate windows scatter light on the rough, limewashed walls.

Tarrant Crawford, St Mary the Virgin

Dorset

Fabulous painted tales in a rural church

This church, which dates back to 12th century, is all that is left of a wealthy Cistercian nunnery – Tarrant Abbey. Today, the long, elegant interior has oak furnishings and a beautiful 16th-century wagon roof. Best of all, however, are the ghostly 14th-century paintings, made to instruct and inspire. There are depictions of Margaret of Antioch, a saint said to have been swallowed by a dragon, and three animated skeletons, who warn three princes of the emptiness of earthly rank and wealth.

Whitcombe Church

Dorset

A saint, a mermaid and a lost dedication

This lovely Medieval church looks like a vision from a Thomas Hardy novel. One of Hardy's friends – the poet and scholar William Barnes – preached here and the church's setting evokes the rustic atmosphere of old Dorset life. Yet in Barnes' time the parishioners knew nothing of Whitcombe's great treasure – the Medieval wall paintings that include an image of St Christopher and a mermaid combing her hair.

Winterborne Tomson, St Andrew

A Dorset gem saved by the ghost of Thomas Hardy

This tiny chapel, built of flint and stone, has barely been altered since it was built in Norman times. The inside is simple, bright and beautiful – with silvery grey, Georgian box pews. It is hard to believe that, less than 100 years ago, the church was home to the donkeys, dogs, pigs and hens of the neighbouring farm. The church escaped total ruin in 1931 only when The Society for the Protection of Ancient Buildings sold a collection of Thomas Hardy manuscripts to pay for the repairs.
